Roundtable Forum, the alternative investment sector's leading independent provider of capital introduction programs, announced today that Michael Hennessy of UNC's Investment Office and Ram Lee of U Penn's Investment Office have joined the firm's Advisory Board.

"The Roundtable Forum has been a valuable resource to organizations like UNC and U Penn for several years. By working together, we are aiming to attract other endowments, foundations and pensions who will benefit from our event," said Jane Halsey, President.

Since 1999, the Forum has successfully produced 17 events in New York and London introducing over 200 managers and their funds to investors from around the globe. Upcoming events are scheduled for April 6th in London and May 5th in New York.

Utilizing its unique and much imitated format, The Forum continues to bring qualified institutional investors and alternative investment managers together in an intimate, relaxed setting that encourages direct and substantive discussion about investment strategies and trends.

Unlike prime broker capital introduction, the Forum is open to all managers regardless of prime broker affiliation. An academic approach to manager selection is utilized, including an open application process and investor committee review. The result is a diverse schedule of managers that reflects the interest of institutional investors today.

The Forum faithfully attracts the industry's most elite institutional investors including endowments, foundations, pensions, family offices, funds-of-funds and high-net-worth individuals to its programs. Attendance is complimentary to qualified investors.
